Education	University of California San Diego PhD Political Science San Diego, CA	June 2026
	University of California San Diego M.A. Political Science San Diego, CA	July 2022
	University of Warwick M.Sc. Statistics with Distinction Coventry, UK	September 2020
	Reed College B.A. Mathematics and Political Science (Interdisciplinary) Portland, OR	January 2018
	National Technical University of Athens B.Eng. Electrical and Computer Engineering Athens, GR	Transferred June 2016
Focus	Democratic Backsliding • Fiscal Federalism • Subnational Government • European Politics • Promissory Democracy • Ranked Choice Voting
Published Research	Voter Information and RCV , an experimental approach to examining how information seeking behavior changes when voters are faced with ranked-choice voting, rather than traditional single-preference. ( Election Law Journal , Vol. 22, No. 4, 2023)
Under Review	Globalization and Political Ambiguity , use of party manifesto text data to test whether political parties rely on strategic ambiguity during election campaigns to evade sanctioning by voters in future elections. ( with Christina J. Schneider and Robert Thompson , under review at Comparative Political Studies )
Ongoing Research	Aspiring Autocrats and Local Autonomy Dissertation research about how aspiring autocrats in Central and Eastern Europe use fiscal recentralization as part of their executive aggrandizement strategy. Investigation on the goals, methods, and outcomes of fiscal recentralization on sub-national funding allocation and the ability of local opposition to successfully contest national power through effective public goods provision. ( dissertation work at UC San Diego )
	Climate Change in Europe and Political Party Support , early stage research that uses novel climate disaster data to explore how increasing rates of catastrophic events related to climate change may affect party preference. ( with Lisa Dellmuth, Evelina Jonsson, and Christina J. Schneider )
	Private Welfare in the Workplace and Support for Social Insurance , there is a set of arguments that private resources (home equity, credit) may dampen voters' support for public insurance programs and redistributive taxation. We investigate this hypothesis in the context of a novel set of workplace mutual aid arrangements—Employee Hardship Funds (EHFs). EHFs enable employers to distribute emergency cash to their workers using donations pooled from employees themselves. (with John Ahlquist)

Past Projects

Quantifying Gerrymandering with MCMC Methods, a summary and quick application of the most current methods used to quantify gerrymandering in US States, based on Markov Chain Monte Carlo simulation. (M.Sc. dissertation project)
